WEBINAR: THE ROLE OF MARITIME TRANSPORT IN THE POST-COVID RECOVERY

Maritime transport is the lifeblood of the world economy, accounting for 90% of world trade in volume. It has played a critical role in keeping trade flows open and supply chains intact during the COVID-19 pandemic. As governments seek to chart a course to a swift and equitable post-COVID recovery, they need to consider policies that would facilitate maritime transport and allow economies to reap the full benefits of maritime trade growth.

On 24 February 2021, the International Chamber of Shipping (ICS) published a quantitative study on 'Protectionism in Maritime Economies', co-authored with Professor Craig VanGrasstek of Harvard Kennedy School of Government. Using the WTO Integrated Trade Intelligence Portal (I-TIP) as one of the primary data sources, the ICS Study identifies tariff and non-tariff policies being implemented by governments worldwide, which are impacting not only maritime transport, but also various other associated economic activities. The study lays out four scenarios for trade policy reform and develops an Index on Protectionism in Maritime Economies (PRIME Index).

The ICS Study could serve as a basis for dialogue between the trade community and the maritime transport sector, between governments and industries, with the aim of improving cooperation and promoting a more secure and more predictable trading environment for maritime transport and supply chains.

In this context, a Simply Services Session will take place on 29 June 2021 to present and discuss the ICS Study. Experts from national maritime authorities, the shipping industry, the trade community, and International Organizations will shed light on the evolution of maritime transport before, during and after COVID-19, how maritime transport can contribute in economic recovery from the pandemic, and the role of the world trading system in facilitating maritime transport and strengthening supply chains.

The banner features the logos of the WTO OMC, Simply Services (Trade in Services Specialist Series), and the International Chamber of Shipping (The Future of Shipping). The text reads: 'The WTO Trade in Services and Investment Division and the International Chamber of Shipping have the pleasure of inviting you to a webinar on: The role of Maritime Transport in the Post-COVID Recovery'. It specifies the date as Tuesday, 29 June 2021, 11:00-13:00 (Geneva time) via ZOOM platform. A call to action states: 'Save the date! Further details about the programme and registration for the event will be circulated shortly'. The bottom of the banner shows a stylized world map.
