26.01.23

Most of the Far Eastern countries had been celebrating the Lunar New Year this week, so overall activity is expectedly slow. Although talks are going on, market sentiment has not really changed (yet?)

Compared to last week, the New ConTex' decline has slowed. The figure stands at 731 points, 7 points down from last week, which equals a less than 1 per cent drop.

Especially the 1100 TEUs have only lost 0.1%/0.3% for 6/12 months' periods and remain well under par. Also the 2500, 3500 and 4250 TEU for long term periods stay below average, whereas nearly all other sizes and periods still lose between 1.0% and around 1.4%. Only faith in the post panamaxes needs to be improved, though. The 5700's are still losing some 3,6% and the 6500's even over 5% - however that's also considerably less than the week before.

When looking at the Y-O-Y changes one might be terrified, but the week-on-week drops don't look that bad anymore and hopes are high situation will improve even more once the Asian players have come back to the table.
